Related Practices: Real Estate

Glaser Weil is pleased to announce that Thomas F. Hanley III has joined the Firm as a Partner in the Real Estate Department. Based in the Firm's Century City location, Hanley will advise clients on acquisitions, sales, leasing, and secured lending/finance transactions.

"We are pleased to welcome the highly-regarded and newest addition to the Firm's Real Estate Department. Tom's esteemed and specialized legal career provides the opportunity for Glaser Weil to expand its various transactional capabilities offered to our clients," said Peter M. Weil, Glaser Weil's Managing Partner.

Hanley focuses his practice on advising investors, lenders, property owners, and developers in all aspects of purchases, sales, financings, lease agreements, and joint ventures. He has counseled clients on hundreds of properties ranging from office and retail to multifamily, and mixed-use projects.

Additionally, he handles matters involving restructuring loan agreements, real estate workouts, negotiating prebankruptcy settlements, and coordinating regulatory compliance. Hanley also represents commercial lenders in real estate financings and has also been involved in numerous real property asset portfolio acquisitions and dispositions.

With a multi-faceted and remarkable resume, his career includes not only legal work, but historic international dealings. Prior to becoming an attorney, Hanley served as a peace negotiator during the conflict in Bosnia in the mid-1990s and successfully negotiated a cease-fire for the war. He was also the original architect of the American Plan, which became the basis for the Dayton Accords that ended the war.

Hanley earned his J.D. from Southwestern University cum laude. As an undergraduate, he received his B.B.A. from Loyola Marymount University.
